1. The tanks occupying Seoul on 28 June were 31-ton class, travelling in a single line at 15-yard intervals. The original invasion included well over 50 tanks. On the morning of 3 July, 50 tanks were observed near Seoul Railway Station. From 4-6 July there was no tank concentration in the Seoul city area. One or two tanks were occasionally parked at the railway station covered by tents.
2. On 6 July, it was common rumor in Seoul that part of the South Korean army was hiding in South Mountain (Nam San). The North Korean People's Army (NKPA) machine-gunned South Mountain by plane; security troops and the NKPA guarded all approaches to the mountain, but no guerrilla activity was visible.
3. On 14 July, one (?First?) division was stationed in the Pupyong and Kimpo areas. The tanks and armored cars which were attached to it have been transferred to the front. On 14 July, seven tanks were observed in Pupyong. Pupyong installations were being inspected by technicians from the Pyongyang arsenal.
4. NKPA training was being given in the former Japanese regimental headquarters at Hoeryong (129-45, 42-25).
5. The railway from Hongui (130-30, 42-25) to Vladivostok was finished in June and is now in use, carrying supplies from the USSR to North Korea.
